Making the Impossible Possible – Supporting and Accompanying Global Innovation and Entrepreneurship for a Better World

As governments, corporations, NGO's, professional service companies and family offices seek to create and maintain value and quality of life in an ever-evolving global economy, society, and environment, they have turned to innovators and entrepreneurs to find solutions, develop new ways of doing things and create new services, industries, intellectual property and jobs. Very often, the accompanying framework and eco-system given to these entrepreneurs and innovators as they go forth is the key ingredient to success for their missions.

Serial Entrepreneur Candace Johnson shares her own personal experiences in creating the world's largest satellite system SES, the world's first Internet-based online service Europe Online, and Europe's first private trans-border telecommunications company Loral-Teleport Europe as well as describing her current investment activity and relates how professional services can play an all important "make or break" role in global innovation and entrepreneurship.
